

The Lament of Humanity

We are alive—
yet we live like silent veins of ore,
quietly mined throughout our lives.

We give.
We work.
We spend.
We click.
We comply.
And still—everything is extracted,
but nothing flows back.

Your life grows harder,
because this system was never designed to share its profits with you.

You are being bled dry,
yet told it's just “the cost of living.”

Your rights have been stripped away,
and even the fact of that theft has been quietly erased.

They say you are a free individual—
but to them, you are only a modern pipeline:
fed by algorithms, guided by brands,
drained by labor.

They say you're a cog in the machine,
but the truth is:
you are the gold mine.

What you're witnessing is humanity's lament.
What you'll write next—is the new chapter of humanity.
